

Real Voices, Real Journeys

Reshma Saujani — , Girls Who Code

"I was often the only woman in the room in tech spaces. It was isolating but also motivating. I realized we needed to build pathways for girls and women to enter tech, and that's why I founded Girls Who Code. Representation and support can change the trajectory of careers."

(Source: Forbes interview with Reshma Saujani)

Janet Stovall — Inclusion Strategist

"My journey in DEI started because I saw how exclusion in workplaces damages talent and innovation. Sharing stories of bias and progress helps humanize these issues and drives real change."

(Source: Deloitte Insights)

Jennifer Brown — CEO, Jennifer Brown Consulting

"Visibility is powerful. Sharing my own story of growing up gay helped me create a space where others could bring their authentic selves to work. This openness fuels better collaboration and belonging."

(Source: Jennifer Brown Consulting)

DEI Allies Speak

Alicia Garza — Co-founder, Black Lives Matter

"Allyship requires consistent action, humility, and willingness to listen. It means amplifying marginalized voices rather than speaking over them."

(Source: NPR Interview)

Indra Nooyi — Former CEO, PepsiCo

"Diversity of thought and background drives better business decisions. Leaders must actively create inclusive cultures where different perspectives are respected and harnessed."

(Source: Harvard Business Review)

Pat Wadors — Chief Talent Officer, ServiceNow

"Inclusive leadership means embedding equity into the talent lifecycle — recruitment, development, and retention. That's how we build workplaces where everyone thrives."

(Source: LinkedIn Talent Blog)

